TYPES OF LEATHER

COW HIDE is comfortable, durable and abrasion resistant. It is the most commonly used leather in gloves market. Cow hide leather are typically chrome tanned to promote longevity.

GOATSKIN is preferred where tactile sensitivity is required. It provides excellent tensile strength and is abrasion resistant. The high lanolin content makes it one of the softest leathers

BUFFALO HIDE is different from cow hide. It is tougher and stronger and more durable than cow leather. It has special grain pattern. It will not melt or burn easily as it is flame resistant to some extent.

GRADES IN LEATHER.

GRAIN LEATHER is the smooth, exterior side of the animal hide. Grain leather is comfortable, durable, and offers better dexterity and sense of touch.

SPLIT LEATHER Split Leather is the internal portion of the animal hide. The rougher texture of split leather makes it easy

Side Split comes from the rib area of the animal. This part of the hide is the most durable due to the density of the fibers.

Shoulder Split is more economical than Side-Split Leather. The additional movement of the animal in the shoulder area creates less density in the fibres.

Belly Split is the most economical type of Split Leather, but it tends to be thin and lacks consistency and durability .
